GRIEG EVENING.

The Grieg evening given by the Musical History club Friday, January 29, was a dicided success. In spite of the number of other attractions, a large audience greeted the soloists and rendered hearty and well deserved ap-

Miss Carrie Browning at the plane gave three numbers from Grieg in her usual charming style. The selections lisplayed Miss Browning's artistic and dainty touch and delicacy of feeling "At Home" was perhaps the favorite with her audience.

Gus Sanders was at his best and his many friends felt that their high estimate of Mr. Sanders' work was more than justified. All his numbers were heartily encored. He sang the Grieg masterplece, "Ich Llebe Dich," in an especially beautiful manner.

Miss Biddle proved herself an ac ompanist of rare merit and as usual delighted her audience with her play-

Mrs. Bishop spoke of Grieg and his contemporaries, and her thorough mastery of her subject, her purity of diction and pleasing style of rendition, combined to produce with her audience a feeling that they had indeed pent an evening with Grieg

She touched upon his private life, peaking of its purity and beauty. Although for so many years handicapped by physical disability, Grieg was un tiring in his work as a composer and gave to the world the beautiful Norwegian music, being played in every home. The king pensioned him, and this permitted him to give the best of his genius to his compositions. When he visited Liszt, he received the first real appreciation of his efforts, and this gave him more courage to work when the dark days came. Grieg said, in speaking to an American. "If I had been compelled to be a teacher as your beloved McDowell, in order to earn my living, I, too, would have become insane." When Grieg died in 1907, the world lost the greatest interpreter of Norwegian music.

This was the second evening of the series to be given this season by the Musical History club, and was in keeping with the high standard set by the club for their work. The next musicale will be given the last of Febru-ary, and Mr. Don McGuire will speak on "Primitive Music."
